

Subject: Follow-up on Requirements Report

Hi,

Thank you again for the requirements analysis and modelling report. It was really helpful to see everything consolidated, and it looks like you've captured most of what we discussed. I had a chance to go through it carefully, and I'd like to respond to a couple of points from our last meeting.

In the future, we'd prefer to encourage students to use the app or website instead of other channels like email, calls, or walk-ins. Students should log in first before lodging their enquiry, and it would be great if they could include supporting files (several, if necessary). I also like the idea that they might be able to check if they've asked something similar before, or at least link back to a previous enquiry.

Sometimes students already know which category their question belongs to, so it makes sense to give them the option to select it. Otherwise, it would be ideal if the system could help guide the classification. If the system gives an automatic response for general enquiry, students should still have a way to say whether that solved their issue or if they'd like someone to follow up. Of course, they should get acknowledgement after sending the enquiry in return.

For appointments, I imagine the process beginning when a student clicks on a booking link sent by the officer. Naturally, they should be logged in to proceed. It would be helpful if the page showed not only available times but also any notes or requests from the officer (like questions or documents the student should prepare). The student should be able to add their own notes or attachments in return.

Ideally, the system would try to propose a suitable time for them first. If that doesn't work, students should be able to pick from other available options, though only within a reasonable window. If nothing suits, there should be a way for them to indicate this so the officer can follow up differently. I would also want these booking links to have a short validity period, and once the booking is confirmed, both the officer's calendar and the notifications to both parties should be updated.

I hope this clarifies some of the details we spoke about. Please let me know if you need further information.

Best regards,

Karen
